BIOGRAPHY

Luke Ritchie is a securities and business litigator known for successfully guiding clients through the many unique hazards and exposure points they face when fighting on multiple fronts—typically, against not only federal and state investigators, but also private litigants and court-appointed receivers who often pursue civil actions in parallel with such investigations. Luke specializes in high-stakes securities and enforcement defense litigation, investigations, and complex business disputes involving federal and state securities laws, and corporate governance and fiduciary laws. He also represents clients facing issues arising under the False Claims Act and state and federal consumer protection laws. The press frequently interviews Luke about his cases and turns to him for his insights. He’s been quoted in The Wall Street Journal, NPR’s Marketplace, the Denver Business Journal, the Colorado Sun, ColoradoBiz, LawWeek Colorado, and other publications and television outlets. Luke has been recognized as a National Law Journal “Litigation Trailblazer.”

In his litigation and trial practice, Luke often is called on to participate in or lead joint defense efforts that involve some of the most respected law firms and lawyers in the country. His clients range in maturity from development stage to public companies and span sectors from fintech and traditional financial services to technology and manufacturing. Luke also represents officers, directors, compliance personnel, and board committees, as well as investment advisors, Certified Financial Planners™, and other highly regulated professionals.

He regularly presents to the legal and business communities on topics related to securities law, investigations, litigation, and legal ethics.

Luke is well known not only for his litigation and trial practice, but also for his bar leadership. He chaired both the Colorado Bar Association’s Business Law Section and Litigation Section, and was a three-term Chair of the CBA’s Securities Law Subsection. Having been appointed by the Colorado Supreme Court, Luke also serves as a member of the Colorado Civil Rules Committee.
